

Amy's Story

Sending our son to daycare in the middle of a pandemic was a very difficult decision for my husband and myself. We had been working from home for over five months, trying to balance work and a toddler.

When the YMCA contacted us about reopening, we decided this might be the right choice for us. The transition was incredibly easy, and our son looks forward to going everyday.

I was extremely nervous about putting our child in daycare after the covid closure. I had a lot of anxiety about whether we were doing the right thing, however we felt it was important for him to socialize and play with other children.

I am very happy with our decision. The YMCA has gone to great lengths to keep the children and staff safe, and it definitely shows. The staff are also extremely friendly and supportive, providing feedback throughout the day, which is wonderful. The YMCA child care is important to our family because it provides a safe and trusted place for our child to learn, grow and socialize while we work.
